THE WOMAN'S MEDICAL COLLEGE OF PENNSYLVANIA AND HOSPITAL

TO OUR PATIENTS

You have given us much.
Through you we have learned what it means to be a person-
a special person with special needs-physical, emotional and spiritual, particular to each individual.
Perhaps this is one of the greatest things we have learned-that each man is an individual with needs but that he depends on others to help him meet these needs.

We have felt so inadequate so much of the time.
It is easy to bathe a patient's body
but the mind is not quite so easy to reach.
We have tried though, many times in not so obvious ways-
the touch of a hand, a special smile, a listening ear, and a prayer.

For all you have given us - in not so obvious ways-
we dedicate this to you.

CLASSROOM

"This must be that class in anatomy they were telling us about."

"Cleaning day in Mrs. Gleaves' file cabinet..."

"Classes never interested me much, either."

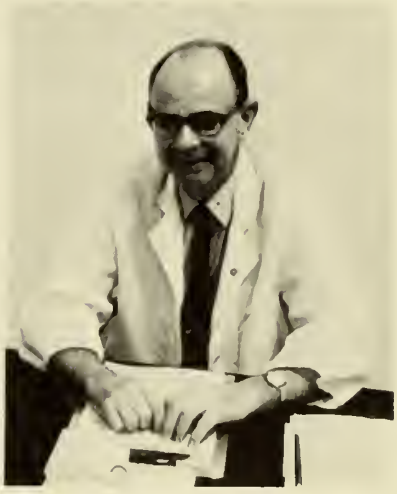

MRS. COLANZI
Secretary

"Your bedpan slipped out???

"This is better than being NPO, but not much!"

"And then there was the time she pulled me in the whirlpool..."

"These are the best days of my life...boy, do I love them!!!"

"I thought I was supposed to get weighed?"

"Mmmm, you'd never guess what I have in here!"

"Look, Mrs. Briggs, I don't mind lifting people, but 400 lbs. is too much."

"Oh, Dr. Edell, see what you do to me!"

"Rectal swabs and gamma globulin for everybody!"

"I wonder where she hid the medication keys this time?"

"See how much fun nursing is!"

"That's right Matt, two ounces of frumenti... ninety proof."

"That's the 5th time he pulled out his Crutchfield tongs. What now?"

"Oh, Russell! I think that I just inserted the dulcolax in the wrong oriface!"

"Patient accidentally fell over the siderails."

"Morphine, codiene, demerol, too
We can get them free for you
Honey, oh babe, be mine."

"How am I going to tell her that they accidentally removed her left ventricle?"

"Let's see, 60 mgs equals???"

"The bed is going up and down and won't stop!"

"I can't get D-flat!"

"You're kidding!"

"Severe substernal pain, radiating down left arm...now what does that mean?"

"There isn't anything I wouldn't do for a student."

"I see one! I see one! Grab it before it disappears!"

"Oil retention enema given X3, followed by..."

"Nobody smiles like Harry!"

"12:15 and all is well???

'Dr. Chien, when are you going to learn to chart in English?"

"If she describes her patient's NG tube drainage one more time, I think I'll throw up!"

"Would you believe I delivered him myself?!!!"

"Look! He cries and wets without even pulling the string!"

O.B.

"Shhhhhhh"

"What do you mean your doctor ordered champagne p.r.n. !"

"May I take your order please?"

"What the heck does cuchie-cuchie-coo mean?"

"Hey look! Baby's got a baby!"

PEDI

"You think he ate his thermometer?"

"No, Ann. You cannot take him home."

"Ok, now it's my turn!"

E.P.P.I.

"Welcome to Hotel Eppi."

"Watch out! Here comes Mac with her roller skates!!"

"What makes you feel that way?"

"A conference on the patient whose behavior has a sexual connotation?"

"And then there was the case of the invisible patient. . . "

"You want to have the wedding in OR #7???"

O.
R.

"I'd like to order 10 scrub gowns. . . topless, see-through, and size 5. "

"And then he accidentally sutured his beard into the incision. "

"Stop that operation! He's not a C-Section!"

"Mrs. Ciambella, where did that patient go???!!!"

"Look what he's doing on my table!"

ER

"What's for this morning... 4 colds, 6 stab wounds, 17 hangovers..."

"Hurry up! Turn it on! Two minutes till Tom Jones!"

"This is nice, but how do you use it?"

"And up here I keep my Excedrin."

ICU

"2 hamburgers and a side order of french fries, please."

"According to these lab studies, you're dead, lady."

"Cool Jerk, da-da-da-dada-de-da."

CLINIC

"This patient just delivered in the waiting room???"

"You ain't givin' that needle to me!"

Mrs. Margaret Aiken

To the class of 1971, Mrs. Aiken has been a source of encouragement and motivation, recognizing our problems and needs, and giving support and guidance. She has stood by our class in times of discouragement and confusion-as well as in times of tranquility.

Her interest in her students has been evidenced by her willingness to accept the position of class advisor, along with her responsibilities in the School of Nursing.

To each of us, Mrs. Aiken has a special significance--but she will long be remembered by the entire class. She has been the force that has taken a group of insecure individuals and helped unite them into a class--a group of young women - sharing common goals, filled with idealism and bound by the desire to care and get involved.

To the person who has given so much and asked so little, we humbly say, "Thank you."

REMEMBER WHEN

August 27, 1968, twenty-seven strangers, coming together for the first time, began a three year journey to maturity. As we look at our Freshman pictures, we can see the changed people we have become. Our hair is five inches longer, we've gained a little weight, but more than that, our expressions have changed. "Little- Girl" innocence has been replaced by expressions of discovery and knowledge- not just the medical knowledge we've picked up in these three years but a better understanding of what it means to be alive. Textbooks told us that man is made of bones, blood vessels and fatty tissue, but experience has told us that he is made of love and pain, joy and sorrow.

As Freshmen, we felt our immaturity. We were thrust into a setting we knew little or nothing about- taking BP's, our first injection, our first complete. We were still under the impression that the doctor is always right, and looked at the seniors with awe. "How could they have learned so much in three years? Will the Freshmen look up to me when I'm a senior?"

For many of us, this was our first time away from home. We had some feelings of insecurity but we also had a taste of independence. We had to learn to live with twenty-six other girls who think and act twenty-six different ways. We began playing "mother" to each other. Thursday night became an outlet for pent-up emotions. Judging by the noise we made, a lot of feelings were released.

With junior year came many new experiences. The beauty of the birth of a child cannot be expressed in words, only in smiles and tears. How difficult it must be for a mother who's baby is in the high risk nursery not being able to feed and hold her child, not understanding what all those tubes and machines are for. And the proud fathers, pressing their noses against the nursery windows-"That's MY baby!"

Little kids seem to hurt more than grown-ups--or is it the nurse who hurts more, seeing a sick, unhappy child? It's distressing to care for a two year old who is so weak he has become lethargic and will not respond. But the warmth of a child's hug when he is frightened and alone can outweigh the pain.

Desolation, despair, fear, anguish. Who can measure the agony of a soul that has become detached from the mind? What words can describe the feeling we experienced when we reached the "detached mind"? We explored the fascinating depths of the mind, but could only touch the surface of its mystery.

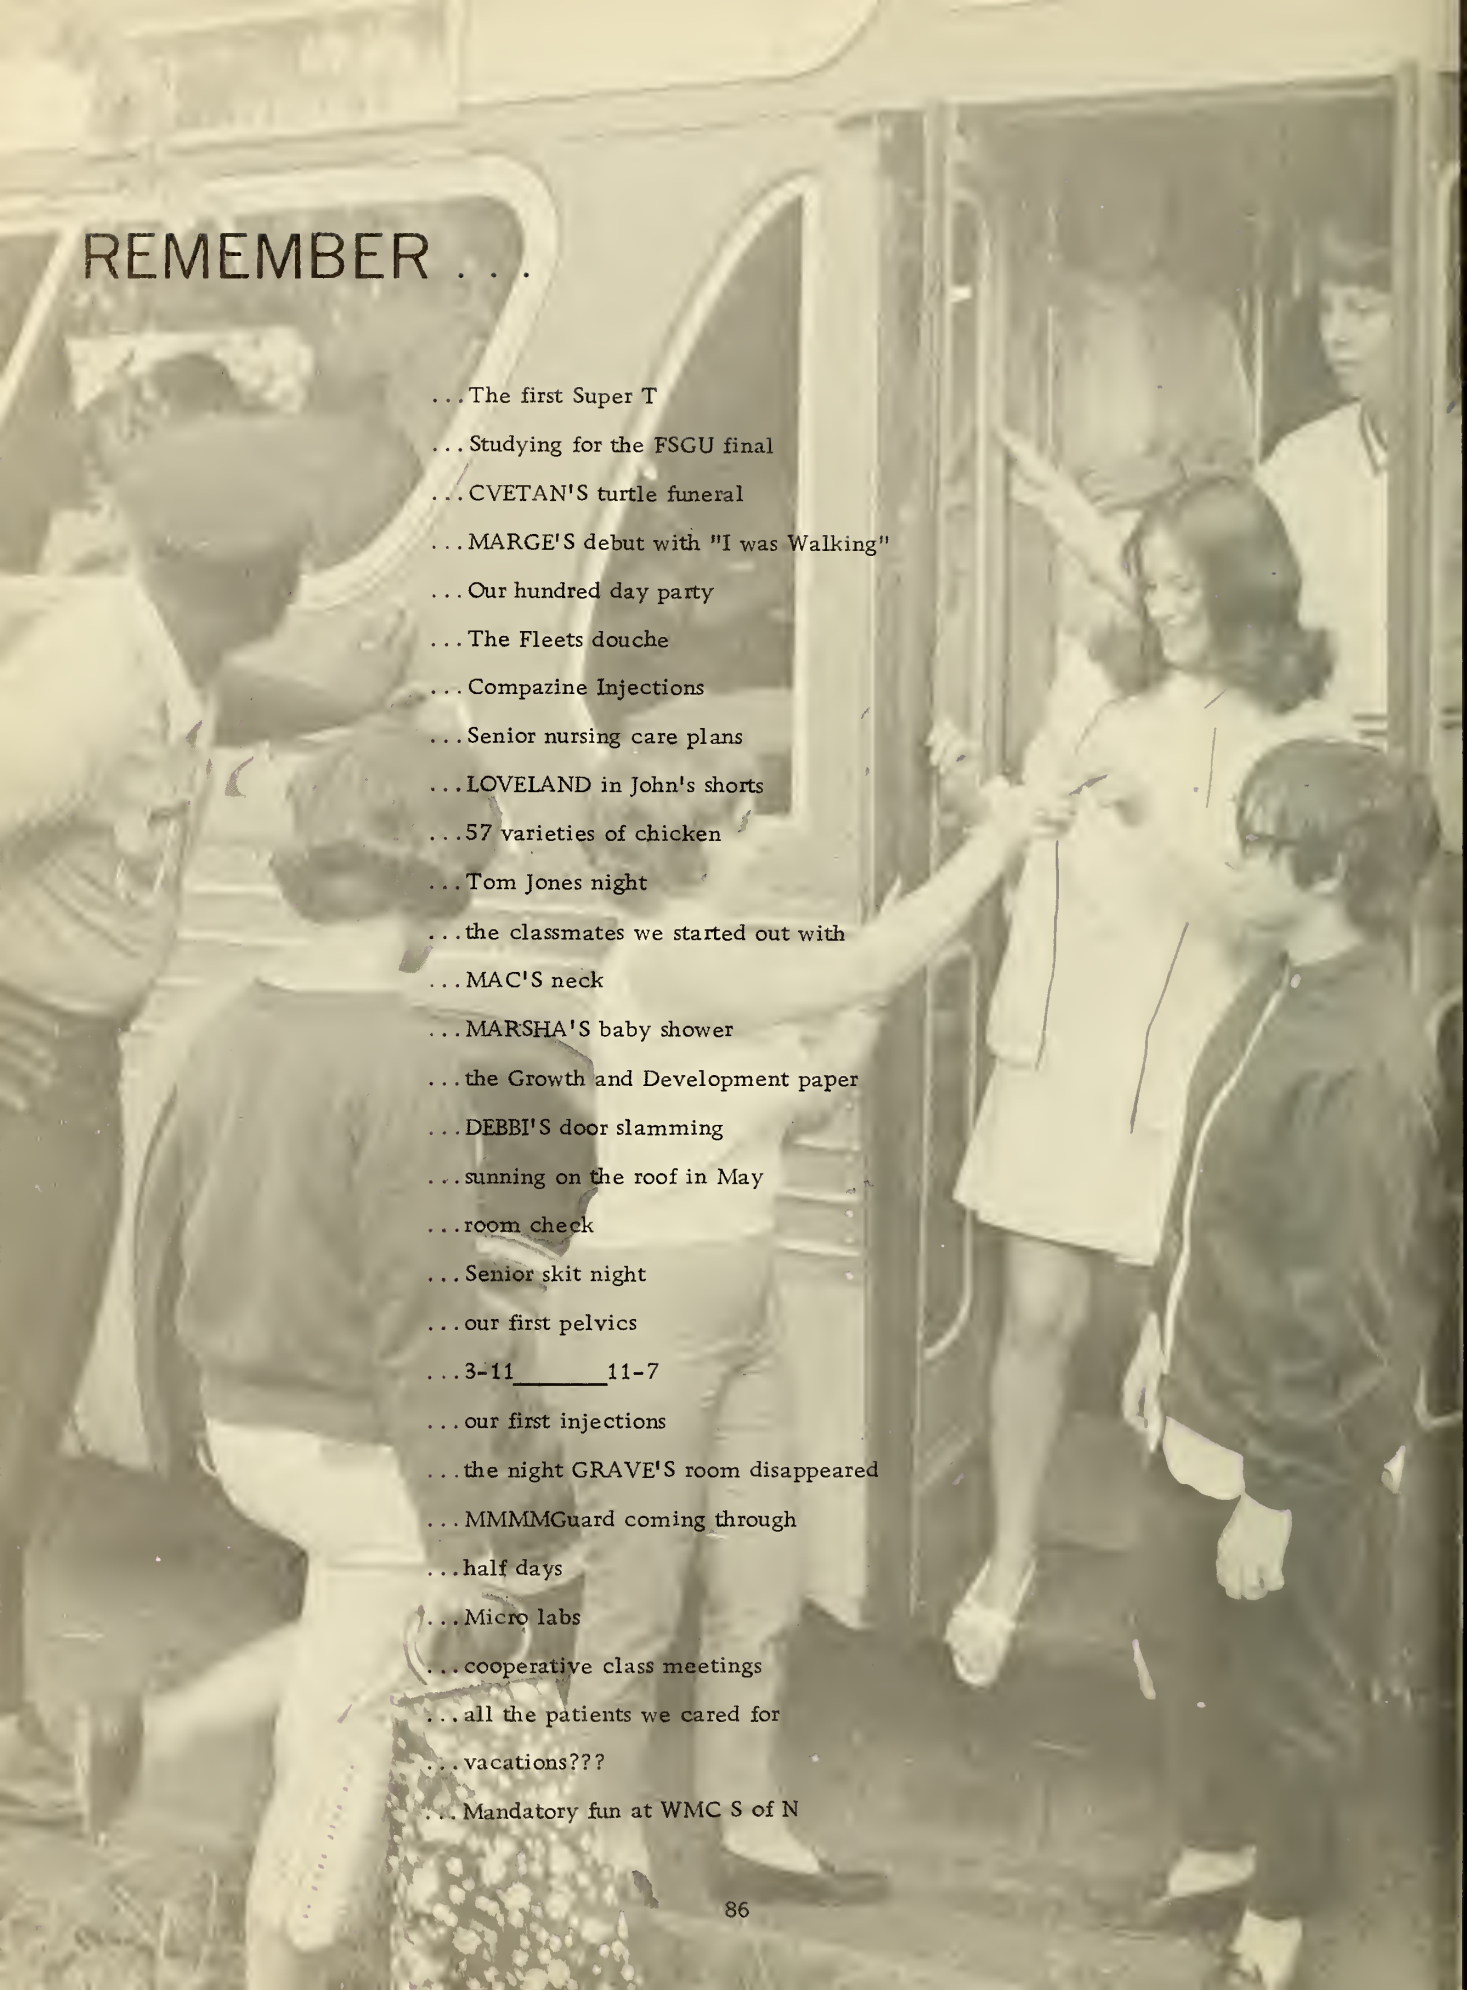

Then came senior year, and along with it the discovery that doctors can be wrong. The freshmen look up to us now, but somehow we don't feel as confident as we thought the seniors were when we were freshmen. Ambivalence is a key word this past year. How many times have we thought of quitting and getting away from it all, but someone reminded us of the short time we had left, so we stayed?

Probably the most important word, though, is "friend". All of us have become very close to a special friend...unlike any other we'll ever have. Long after we've forgotten the silly quarrels and misunderstandings we'll remember talking about life, death, religion, and discovering that the fears and worries we thought were ours alone are shared by many, even though they may not show. We learned that to love someone we must reveal ourselves to them and they will do the same.

Graduation is drawing closer. Once again we are ambivalent. This is the ultimate goal of our three years here and we've been long awaiting this day. But after the ceremonies and the congratulations will come the farewells. Farewell to the faculty, farewell to the hospital, but hardest of all, farewell to our friends. What will we do when we HAVE to talk to someone but nobody's there? Can anybody else understand us and give us the comfort we need? In the words of one of our classmates, "Being alone is a hard thing, especially if it has not always been that way." Can we make it alone, without the encouragement of one who has felt the same way?

We've been traveling together for three years now. On May 28, 1971, twenty-four friends will come together again, many for the last time, to complete our journey.
